The War in India. THE SEQUEL TO THE DEFENSE OF LUCKNOW.

We have already given the intensely interesting narrative of the defense of Lucknow from the pen of Major Inglis. The special correspondence of the London Daily News gives a fitting sequel to this narrative. It shows how Lucknow was relieved :

On the 27th of November Sir Colin set out from Alumbagh, on his return to Cawnpore, leaving Sir ammunition, stores, grain, bullocks, and the baggage of miles, and the rear guard never came up till the following doubt, and that he is the last man able to preserve even one officer, Lieutenant Salmon—and of the arrival of on the 28th they left their ground at 7 A. M., marched for twelve hours-thirty miles-without intermission.-The troops, tired and hungry, were delighted of the approach of food and rest; but many got none. Sir Colin Campbell had heard heavy firing in the direction of Cawapore, and ordered the artillerry and calvary to push it may be as well to relate the events which had occur-

Our loss was proportionately heavy, and several of our men and even some officers, fell alive into the hands of the enemy. It is stated in private letters that one of these was forthwith hanged, a second beaten to death with shoes, and a third tied to a cart-wheel, which in a few successive revolutions crushed him to death. Our vancing close to our entrenchment, they took possession of and burned the whole of the cold-weather clothing of our men, which had been stored up at Cawnpore. On the following day the rebels attacked the entrenchment,
